As a Fellow I constantly research what is new and keep up with. Elisa Gómez's Musings Menu Viralencia Now that I think about it, my students know what it feels like to be humiliated, or to be described as 'tomboy' or 'battered wife.' I could only laugh when one of them mocked the 'baby daughter' I lost recently, and called me a bastard because I was 'bringing home dinner' when I came from work. But I digress. These are just a few of the items listed on these 'markers' I keep in the classroom. If a student is noted in red, it means there is an issue going on in that student's life. If a student is noted in yellow, there is an ongoing low level problem, but no indication as to what it is. If the marker is marked in blue, it is in the grey area of a problem or flaw that could well cause a disruption in a student's life. Usually this is immediately addressed. Sometimes it results in a warning to other staff, parents, or students involved. Sometimes it is noticed that there is an underlying problem that needs to be discussed with the student. Other times the issue has been handled to the best of my ability by other members of the classroom team. Many have been brought to the attention of the school administration, and there has been no complaint from the student or the parents. Why? Because I'm most concerned with the students. I was a teacher for twenty-three years before coming to the Philippines. I remember my first year back in the classroom, asking an administrator why the head of Spanish was unhappy. To my surprise, he told me that the five or six students who
